MGNREGA as a Model of Development: A Policy Perspective

*Rakesh Kumar Singh

MGNREGA (Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Act) has completed a decade. This act provides hundred days guaranteed wage employment to the rural poor. It was started as a flagship programme of the central government. This research paper analyse MGNREGA as a model of development. This will try to examine whether MGNREGA provide sufficient assistance to cover minimum basic need for a household, and can the poor rural households exercise their rights and have they access to their entitlement?

India's National Security – A Evolution

*Shri. Ramesh J. Perkar

India was partition of the country on religious lines, without taking into consideration its multiple identities. A number of secessionist and the so-called revolutionary movements are operating in India today. Their goal could be to overthrow the government and bring about revolutionary changes in the structure and functioning of the state, or even secession from the Indian Union. The rise of fundamentalist forces is posing the most serious threat to India's security. Fired with religious zeal these forces have created an entirely new situation. With the 'Golden Crescent', and the 'Golden Triangle' in India's neighbourhood, drug trafficking poses yet another threat to our security. Effective steps to reduce ethnic and social inequalities, disparities in educational and employment opportunities, and for creating an effective machinery for the redressal of public grievance The need for a well co-ordinated security forces. It should include the police, the paramilitary forces, the army and the intelligence agencies. A composite force on the lines of the National Security Guards (NSG) should be organized in all the states. The internal security problems should not be treated as merely law and order problems. They have to be dealt with comprehensively in all their dimensions and at all levels political, economic and social. We need a comprehensive security policy that will be implemented effectively at all levels.
